In the action of the Louisville Trust Co. as Administrator of Allen Northern against the Louisville, Henderson & St. Louis Railway Company which was heard in the United States Court at Louisville, Ky., on Wednesday and Thursday last, Judge Barr gave the jury peremptory instructions to find for the defendant, a verdict was accordingly rendered. Messrs. Gardner and Moxley were attorneys for Plaintiff. Messrs. James P. Helm, of Louisville, and David R. Murray, of Cloverport, represented the defendant.
This was an interesting case especially on account of the law questions involved. The facts were as follows: Allen Northern and Thomas Farguhar were miners and had been working in the coal mines at Falcon in Hancock county, but had quit and intended to take the morning train going to Hawesville and thence to Cannelton, Ind., their homes. They had their clothing in coffee sacks and had their tools tied together, in one bundle. It had been raining that morning and the platform at the station was wet and slippery as also were the car steps. When the train arrived at the station Farguhar got on the train leaving Northern to put the clothes and tools on the baggage car. Northern and Wm. Robson took the clothes and tools to the baggage car and they with the assistance of Lewis, the station agent, put the articles in the baggage car. Northern remarked to the baggage master, "Put these off at Hawesville." There was evidence that Northern then started back to get on train. Some of the witnesses said he stopped and told at least one person good bye and shook hands with him, other witnesses did not see this. At all events the train started and he let one coach (the divided coach for whites and negroes) pass and attempted to catch and get on the front end of the rear coach and missed his footing and fell under the wheels and was so crushed that he died several hours after. Neither Farguhar or Northern had tickets.
The law questions involved were:
First—Was the relation of carrier and passenger established? It appeared that the baggage master was also Express agent and very frequently articles were put in the car under similar circumstances and he would go back through the cars and find if there was a passenger to represent the baggage if none he then billed it as express matter. Judge Barr held that there was enough evidence on this point to justify submitting the question to the jury.
Second—Did the train remain at the station a reasonable length of time to allow the discharging and taking on of passengers. The judge also ruled that this was a question that might be decided by the jury.
Third—Was Northern guilty of contributory negligence resulting in his death by attempting to get on a moving train? On this point he held that the evidence for the Plaintiff showed that Northern attempted to get on a moving train, which was moving at an increasing speed and when he made the attempt the train was moving about four miles an hour and from a platform which was admitted to be wet and slippery and that such was contributory negligence as to prevent a recovery and hence he instructed the jury to find for the Defendant.
The accident occurred on March 7, 1903. The Plaintiff sued for $25,000 damages.
The practice of getting on and off moving trains is very common and is a dangerous practice. Persons doing so should remember, if they suffer an injury that they will be held to blame and cannot recover any damages from the Railway Company.
